The body of laws, regulations, and decisions that governs trade associations, professional societies, and philanthropic and other nonprofit corporations continually grows and changes. As a result, these self-governing membership organizations can have difficulty determining whether their activities are in fact legal.

To help executives who manage these organizations gain a broad overview of the laws, regulations, and decisions that govern these organizations activities and thus identify potential threats, this ambitious book presents a summary treatment of all the legal governance, operations, antitrust, and taxation subjects that can be expected to arise in typical trade, professional, philanthropic, or similar associations. Many subjects presented in this book have not been covered in the extensive literature for nonprofit and association law. Even for those subjects that have been treated extensively elsewhere, this unique book explains the topics in plain English and in an outline format. Furthermore, to assist attorneys, accountants, and others who advise these organizations, each subject includes an extensive list of references for further research and understanding.

Finally, this book also provides a documents supplement with 25 sample documents covering governance and transaction topics. These include articles of incorporation and bylaws, guidelines, policies, codes of ethics, employment agreements, nondisclosure agreements, author agreements, and more.
