Judaism and Hellenism: Studies in their Encounter in Palestine during the Early Hellenistic Period

Martin Hengel

Judaism and Hellenism is a comprehensive study of the impact of Hellenism on Judaism in the intertestamental period by Martin Hengel, late professor of New Testament Theology and Early Judaism at the University of Tübingen. Judaism and Hellenism is highly credible in terms of its amount of material and exhaustive survey of the Hellenistic civilization related to the development of second temple Judaism. Hengel's thesis is that all Judaism from about the mid-third century B.C.E. must be regarded as Hellenistic in the strict sense in light of the pervasive Hellenistic influence over both the Hellenized and the anti-Hellenization groups in the Diaspora and in the Palestine, through the Hellenistic political, societal, cultural, and economic structures. Hengel warned the dangerous distinction between "the Greek-speaking Judaism of the western diaspora and the Aramaic/Hebrew speaking Judaism of Palestine or of Babylonia" (p. 193), a caution that has been gradually noticed by contemporary NT scholarship. Hengel believed that the Hellenistic reform movement and the persecution by Antiochus IV propelled the post-exilic Jewish community to put even greater emphasis on the Law as central to Judaism, preparing the theological background of the post-Hellenistic Judaism and the rise of the prophetic Christianity.
