Never the Twain Shall Meet (Collected Short Stories Book 7) Stephen Donald Huff

Every day, we confront ourselves in mirrors of various shapes and sizes. We stare into them, and our reflections stare back. Within these visions, everything about our reflection is backward, opposite, and reversed. Laws of physics prevent one side from emerging into the other, but we all wonder how far those renditions of reality might go. We wonder about life on the other side.

How far does our mirror's reflection imitate reality? If we could crossover to the other side, what might happen when in the twain we and our reflections meet? An insightful short story.
