A Fly on the Wall in Zahedan: A fictional short story about how terrorism is managed worldwide
Sarhang Burayd

At a meeting, inside a secret complex in Zahedan Iran, a senior terrorist colonel impresses his boss as he presents everything he knows about how The Organization manages terrorism worldwide, including: strategy, tactics, networks, communications, and security.

Wouldn't it be fascinating to be a fly on the wall at that meeting! This short story explains the motives and methods of worldwide terrorism. And it gives a glimpse into the psychopathic minds of the individuals that manage it.

The colonel explains why the West is so ineffective in combating terrorism. He explains how terrorist organizations world wide are still able to communicate effectively, even though the West has organizations like the NSA that monitor virtually all paper and electronic communications, from public and private mail, to disposable cell phones to coded military radio transmissions.
