Can Do!: The Story of the Seabees William Bradford Huie

Can Do!, first published in 1944, is a fascinating account by Lt. William Huie of the formation and Second World War activities of the U.S. Navy 'Seabees' (from "C.B." - construction battalion). The book covers projects of the Seabees throughout the South Pacific, the Aleutian Islands, and in Italy, as well as numerous personal stories of the men as they faced enemy attacks, for example, while attempting to construct vital island runways. Their skill and competence in critical trades such as construction, engineering, pipe-laying, electricity, and plumbing, and their positive 'Can Do!' attitude in the face of danger and difficult conditions were critical in the Allied effort to win the war and remain an inspiration to younger generations. Included are 70 pages of photographs of Seabee activities throughout the world.
