Most people search for decades to find their soulmate; Rachel Masterson was born with hers.

Rachel is fed up with being known as the crazy girl who talks to herself, so she's thrilled when moving to a new town gives her a chance at a whole new identity, without the stigma of her "imaginary friend," Rider, the soul who has shared her body for the last fifteen years.

Hit with the triple-whammy stress of trying to make new friends (and her first boyfriend) in a new school, far away from the only other person who has ever understood her, Rachel's relationship with Rider is strained by the choices that she makes. When a tragic accident tears them apart, can Rachel live without her soulmate?
